A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE

BY TENNESSEE WILLIAMS

DIRECTED BY WEYNI MENGESHA

What a rare gift it has been for me as a director to dive back into this extraordinary play.

Tennessee once said that Streetcar was “a plea for the understanding of delicate people.” When he wrote the play, America was going through an enormous and, for some, destabilizing cultural shift: tensions and resentments emerged between generations of settled Americans and the many immigrants coming to seek a better life in post-World War II America. Old ways of the South collided with modern, urban sensibilities; plantations became impoverished while city centres began to flourish; veterans were integrating back into society while women fought to maintain their place as they made room for returning men.

All of the characters also come from different racial and economic backgrounds, but are connected through their desperate need to survive. Although they share in this need, their differences, insecurities, and egos limit their ability to understand each other. In writing about the characters in Streetcar, Tennessee notes: Nobody sees anybody truly, but all through the flaws of their own ego. That is the way we all see each other in life. Vanity, fear, desire, competition – all such distortions within our own egos – condition our vision of those in relation to us. Add to those distortions in our own egos, the corresponding distortions in the ego of others – and you can see how cloudy the glass must become through which we look at each other.

Working on this play has made me reflect on how we can see each other more clearly when we have patience, accountability, and ultimately love for each other. I am so grateful to have the chance to revisit this piece with these wonderful artists, and to share it with you.

Upcoming at Soulpepper, you can continue your journey through New Orleans with our concert, The Big Easy: Music of New Orleans. We’ve also announced our 2024/25 season, including What the Constitution Means To Me by Heidi Schreck, starring Amy Rutherford, and the concert Billie, Sarah, and Ella: Revolutionary Women in Jazz, starring Divine Brown and Shakura Dickson.

Find out more about our upcoming season, including our new subscription and membership options at soulpepper.ca. It’s going to be an exciting year of your city and your stories, at your theatre. Come join us!

It has been fascinating – or as Blanche would say “fascinatin’” – to return to this production almost 5 years after the first one. Returning to much of the same company has been exhilarating. While many of the words have had to be relearned, the spirit of Blanche is still there, perhaps even stronger than it was in 2019. I think that this is one of the reasons that Tennessee Williams’ plays endure. They are never prescriptive and always human. The world may change, but the human experience does not. Each of his characters is flawed, wounded and full of contradictions. Each of his characters is in need of connection and safety. This is something that can be easily forgotten in the violence and deception that occurs throughout the play. I have had to meet Blanche with empathy, imagination, and a good dose of humour. I have had to fight for her and care for her. I have had to meet her experiences with my own experiences. Tennessee demands it.

Amy Rutherford

Actor, Blanche DuBois, A Streetcar Named Desire

Tennessee Williams once said, “My heroines always express the climate of my interior world at the time (they) were created.” Blanche DuBois, his most famous character, was created after the Broadway success of The Glass Menagerie. Apparently, fame made Williams feel fragile, susceptible to demons.

I don't want realism. I want magic.

A Streetcar Named Desire is set in the magical city of New Orleans and it pulses with the city's energy, music – what the playwright calls the blue piano – and raucous intermixing of cultures, ethnicities and languages. Like their creator, the characters live in the French Quarter.

The play begins in spring when Blanche moves in with her sister Stella and brother-in-law, Stanley, who she's never met. They clash immediately. Where Blanche is delicate, Stanley is robust. Where she wants magic, he insists on reality. Attraction and repulsion drive them. He, a working-class son of Polish immigrants, resents her air of superiority; she, a daughter of the southern plantation class, finds him brutish. He is also stirred by her disgust and she is also dazzled by the vigour of his appetites. Her conviction that her 'refined' upbringing makes her superior to him is one of her many illusions. The world she mourns was built on racism and exploitation and her past is a good deal more complicated than she can bear to admit.

Living together in a cramped apartment, the characters grapple with what Camille Paglia calls the “... searingly revolutionary force” of sexuality. In this world, white men are permitted, even forgiven, their sins and peccadilloes while women are crucified for theirs.

I won't be looked at in this merciless glare!

In a way, it's all in Blanche's first line: “They told me to take a streetcar named Desire, transfer to one called Cemeteries, ride six blocks and get off at – Elysian Fields!” It sounds lyrical but there actually was a streetcar that terminated on Desire Street in the Ninth Ward. In Williams' hands that ordinary reality acquires poetic resonance, and sets us upon the track of Blanche's fate. Autumn will come, and with it, as one critic said, the shipwreck of beauty upon the rock of the world's vulgarity.

I, I, I took the blows in my face and my body!

PLAYWRIGHT BIOGRAPHY

Thomas Lanier (Tennessee) Williams III was born in 1911 in Mississippi. In his 30s, he settled in New Orleans and fell for a volatile young man (the model for Stanley Kowalski). The Glass Menagerie, his breakout play, came in 1944 and A Streetcar Named Desire premiered in 1947. This period also included Sweet Bird of Youth, Camino Real, and Cat on a Hot Tin Roof. Difficulties with alcohol and drugs led to hospitalization in 1969 and persisted until he died. In addition to plays, he wrote novels, essays, film scripts, poetry and an autobiography. He died in New York City in 1983.

Background Notes by Paula Wing

This production builds on the work of the artists who were a part of the 2019 process: actors Leah Doz, Akosua Amo-Adem, and SATE, Alexander Coach Kelly McEvenue, and the stage management team of Arwen MacDonell, Emily Mewett, Andrea Baggs, and Kim Moreira. We gratefully acknowledge their contribution to our work. Thank you as well to Andrew Leeke, Corey MacVicar, and Kurt Nicholson.

The artists and staff of Soulpepper and the Young Centre for the Performing Arts acknowledge the original caretakers and storytellers of this land —the Mississaugas of the Credit, the Haudenosaunee, the Anishinaabe, and the Wendat First Nations. We commit to honouring and celebrating their past, present and future.
